SPECIAL ORDER OF THE DAY

By General Sir E. H. H. ALLENBY, G.C.B., G.C.M.G.,
Commander-in-Chief,

EGYPTIAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCE.

---

I wish to remind all ranks serving under my command that during the trying and unavoidably extended period that must elapse before the demobilization of the Egyptian Expeditionary Force can be completed, the good name of the British Army depends upon the individual conduct of each member of the Force in the various countries now in our occupation.

Courtesy and consideration to the inhabitants of these countries were never more essential, even during the period of active operations, than they now are, and I feel certain that I can rely on every member of this Force to maintain the traditions of the British Army in this respect.

In these countries special temptations exist with regard to Wine and Women. Both must be resisted. Our relatives and friends are anxiously awaiting our return home, and they will expect to find all those of us who have escaped wounds in action with our physical and our moral energies unimpaired. Treat all women with courtesy, but shun all undue intimacy. Remember that temptation, which when encountered is hard to resist, is often easy to avoid.

Final impressions are usually the more lasting; and on the behaviour of the troops during the present period will depend the final impression left by the British Army on the inhabitants of these countries.

The honour of the Egyptian Expeditionary Force is in your hands. I do not fear to leave it there.
